

Bill Givens & Sandy Givens

There are two things I immediately remember about my friend Don Brunk.

One is years ago when my son and I rebuilt the fence around Andy Johnson's place after a MRA meeting where a decision was made to move the road. We were building the buck and rail fence when an "old" (in our terms) man showed up with a hammer and started helping us. My son whispered to me who this "old" man was. My reply was "that's Don Brunk." My son remarked "that he sure knew how to use a hammer driving big nails!"

The other times were when I would go to Don's house to consult with him on Water Rights, and there were many times! You probably don't know that Don wrote most of the Water Rights Laws during his time in the Senate in Wyoming, but I sure never forgot it. I would go Don and Jo's house, and she would always offer me a cup of coffee.

I would accept, and she would excuse herself, and Don and I would discuss Water Rights.
